

Defined Contribution Plan Using a Retiree-Only Health Reimbursement Arrangement (HRA) or Employer Sponsored 403(b)

Define the Amount Of Your Contribution Toward the Benefit

Due to rising health insurance costs, schools who offer retiree health insurance are finding their plans unsustainable over the long term, and may be accumulating large unfunded OPEB (Other Post-Employment Benefit) liabilities.

Employers can define the contribution amount towards retiree health insurance instead of defining the benefit. This defined contribution plan allows new hires to receive an annual contribution to an HRA or 403(b) that they can use in retirement, reducing the employer's unfunded liability. Combined with a vesting schedule, this plan can be a powerful retention tool during active employment.

How It Works

- Employer deposits an amount into an employee's HRA, or 403(b) account during active employment, but the employee cannot access the money until retirement or separation of service
- Contribution defaults into a fixed interest account (variable interest plan options are available)
- Can be subject to a years of service vesting schedule

Advantages to Employer

- Fund the benefit while it is being earned
- Save all payroll/FICA taxes
- Reduces/eliminates OPEB (post-employment) liability

- Predictable cash flow for the employer
- Vesting provides a retention tool
- Interest earnings over time increase the value of the benefit

Advantages to Employee

- Can use HRA funds tax-free for eligible medical expenses and medical insurance premiums including medical, dental, vision, and Medicare B, D, and supplement plans
- Surviving spouse/qualified dependents can continue to use the remaining HRA balance for eligible medical expenses and insurance premiums if the retiree passes away
- 403(b) is tax-deferred and benefits are available at age 55 for retired employees without an early withdrawal penalty.
